First Day Before Camera in New Irene Dunne Film

AN OLD-FASHIONED GIRL
Ann Marsters, Boston Evening American and Boston Sunday Advertiser feature writer, is pictured here in the costume of 1852 which she wore in the Paramount production, "High, Wide and Handsome," starring Irene Dunne, the first picture in which Boston's noted girl reporter was given a role.

Camera? A Reporter Becomes an Actress

And now Ann Marsters goes before the camera. Yesterday, in the first article of her series, "ANN MARSTERS IN THE MOVIES," in the Boston Sunday Advertiser, she revealed how the make-up artists turned her, Boston's noted girl reporter, into a Glamour Girl. Today, the second article tells what happened during her first appearance for work in the filming of the Paramount production, "High, Wide and Handsome," starring Irene Dunne.

Daily heretofore, in the Boston Evening American and Boston Sunday Advertiser, Miss Marsters will tell, as only a trained reporter can, her stories of actual work in the movies with the brightest stars of Hollywood.

Begin "ANN MARSTERS IN THE MOVIES" now and follow it daily.

Hollywood, Cal., Feb. 15.—The telephone rings. "Paramount calling. Report for costume fitting at 8 o'clock tomorrow. Be made up and ready to work on 'High, Wide and Handsome' set at 9."

So—I am in the movies!

And the movies, to be specific, is a place in Hollywood where more than three million Americans would like to be, but which I am to be served by those three million people, no doubt—and perhaps by a couple of million more, from here to Saugus, who have managed to keep secret their movie ambitions.

Several hundred telephone calls, are ringing in Hollywood and vicinity. Extras and "bit" players are being given calls to report at various studios. The stars, too, are receiving the same type of call.

So I, along with a lot of extra girls and perhaps a few Claudette Colberts and Carole Lombards, decide to wash my hair and go to bed early.

It is a strange feeling, being in the movies for the first time.

Dr. Dafoe Stricken With Flu AUTOMOBILES HELD VOID

BOOST URGED BY REPORT OF MASTER

State Insurance Commissioner Francis J. DeCelles' compulsory automobile insurance rates, averaging a 2 per cent reduction for 1937, were ruled illegal today by William H. Hitchcock of the State Board of Bar Examiners.

The Hitchcock report to Supreme Court, with Hitchcock as master in the hearings, indicated that if the court accepts the ruling, rates for 1937 will be increased 5.8 per cent on longer cars and 6.5 per cent on commercial vehicles.

Commissioner DeCelles, who is also probable lieutenant governor, said that he already knew the rates were illegal.

Hitchcock, secretary of the state board, said an order on petition brought by 47 insurance companies for review and annulment of the DeCelles rate, promulgated by the insurance commissioner September 22.

In his report, the master makes a veiled criticism of former Governor Currier. The report, says in part:

"It was in evidence that the

7 Armed Convicts Kidnap 4, Escape

Boston, Feb. 15 (AP).—Seven convicted criminals, believed to be holding two prison escapees as hostages, kidnaped four other prisoners from the North Carolina prison at Columbus today.

Charles M. Weaver, head of the post office, said his latest report indicated the kidnappers had taken the prison train in which they fled and had commandeered at least two automobiles, possibly making the drivers hostages.

Several highway patrolmen were thrown into the chase, to augment efforts of county officers.

Fear that serious trouble developed at the prison farm, born of the fact that all telephone wires were severed, disappeared when an official reported at midday that the situation was quiet.

Weaver was informed the convicts kidnapped Captain H. H. Manning, in charge of the prison at the camp, and fled with 150 pounds before making their get away.

Trial Bridal Of Girl, 16, Revealed

Boston, Feb. 15.—A six-month "trial marriage" of a 16-year-old woman and a youth one year older was revealed for the first time here today during a divorce hearing in Probate court.

Grated, separate support from her husband last December, Mrs. M. C. Townsend, 18, of Common street, Lawrence, had Joseph Townsend, 19, brought into court for failing to pay over $4 a week in alimony with the court order.

Miss Mary T. McCarthy, counsel for the young woman, related the unusual story of how the two had come to Boston in February, 1935, to enter into a six-month "trial marriage."

The divorce and they returned to Lawrence in August, 1935, were granted, only to separate the following March.

The young wife's testimony was very brief and to the point. She said:

"I still in love with him."

"Well, your first debt is to your wife. Other debts come afterwards," said the court.

Judge O'Brien then told Townsend to pay the court $4 a week or going to jail.

ESCAPE PERIL LOOKS IN STATE PRISON

(This is the first of a series on conditions in the state's penal institutions, as seen from the inside. Massachusetts has long boasted of its institutions. The Boston State Hospital exposures have shaken this complacency; and here is the truth on the prisons, at Charlestown, Bridgewater, Concord and Norfolk.)

By ALAN C. FRAZER
Boston Evening American Staff Writer

Crumbling walls do not a prison make, or buckling walls or sagging walls.

The walls of State Prison at Charlestown, walls of the shops and cell blocks and the final outer barriers are actually crumbling, buckling and sagging.

Window casements throughout the entire institution appear ready to fall in or out, at any time.

Ventilators and there have been escapes through good, substantial ventilation are stunted from the weakness of their foundations.

Even in steel wall of the Death House has had to be reinforced with stout purling on the inside.

Inmate Escapes Mattapan Hospital

Police are baffled today that John J. Lohan, 30, of 19 street, South Boston, inmate of Boston State Hospital, had escaped today.

It was the first such escape since the investigation into state mental institutions was opened.

Newly-Engaged Couples Feted At Club Parties

By BETTY ALDEN

VALENTINE'S EVE was the occasion for great celebrating... both by couples who have already been hit by Dan Cupid's darts... as well as by those who are very likely on his looks as good targets for some future archery...

Several newly-engaged couples had large parties Saturday evening... But Anne Torbert and Horace Andrew White thought a luncheon was the ideal way to celebrate their engagement... or rather the announcement of their engagement... for practically ever since Anne made her debut and Horace came from his home in Seattle to enter Harvard, they have been waiting for the last semester of his senior year to come so they could let the world in on their news... Anne wore a valentine of red roses on the bodice of her creamy tulle frock, which swished and rustled as she danced at the Towne Club... and sported her new engagement ring of sapphires surrounded by diamonds...

Catherine Buff and her fiancé, Robert W. Scott of Boston and New York, who announced their engagement Saturday, are going to be married in June, were surrounded by friends at the Towne Club Saturday evening... all the girls wore corsages and the boys wore easy proposing toasts to the happy couple... Catherine is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Louis Buff of Beacon street and an alumna of Sarah Lawrence College... which makes her a member of the committee of girls planning the "Ball Ball" at the Balmore Room on February 24 for the scholarship fund of Sarah Lawrence... Her fiancé, son of the late Mr. and Mrs. Robert W. Scott, is a junior at Harvard and belongs to D. C. and Trojans Clubs... The White Broomers (Nancy Bowler), who are still a honey-moon couple, had a party of friends at their table... including "Cathy" Richardson... Nancy departed for New York yesterday for a week of shopping and gadding about with her mother... Jackie Marshfield had to play "Here Comes the Bride" for Betty Sagendorf as well as for the other engaged girls... But used all his brass section and took them right over to the table to serenade her and Tony Dow...

Ray Brown was in foursome with Edith Garrison and her brother, Johnnie, and Gordon Smith... and Arnett McKennan wandered about visiting with one party and then another... Mr. and Mrs. George Rowland were others in the throng of dancers... Mrs. Rowland wears a black gown with a full length cape of red, thrown back over her shoulders to reveal a turquoise lining... the Henry Cabot Lodge, on their first visit back home since they moved to Washington, dropped in for a while, and Florence Dymond made merry with a group of young people...

Alice Vose Burrage Engaged

VALENTINE'S DAY brought to light another engagement of interest to Bostonians... and especially those who summer up in the Peterborough-Dublin colony... that is the announcement by Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Vose Burrage of the engagement of their daughter, Alice Vose Burrage, to Robert Howe Booth, son of Mrs. William Stone Booth of Boston and Peterborough, and the late Mr. Booth, formerly of Gloucestershire, England...

Alice is a member of the Junior League and Vincent Club, and attended Beaver Country Day School, Oldfields in Maryland, as well as Madame Perrier's in Paris...

Her fiancé graduated from Harvard in 1929 and from the Harvard Business School in 1931... He is a member of the Longwood Club, the Union Boat Club and the Harvard Club of New York...

Mrs. Hayden Tuckman, Sr., of Marlborough street, is returning today from New York, where she has been the guest of her son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. F. Herman Kinnick... The occasion of her visit was the wedding on Saturday of her grandson, Francis Kinnick, to Sybil Kane Jay, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. DeLaney Kane Jay of Waltham, N. Y... Gertrude McGilley Jay (Mrs. Peter Jay, Jr.), daughter of Mrs. Holden McGilley of Milton, was one of the bridesmaids in the wedding, which took place at the Winchley Hill estate of the bride's maternal grandfather, Mrs. Edwin Denison Morgan...

Eleanor Shaw of Needham has been in New York over the week-end to attend the dance party given at the Hudson Room of the R. Regis for Frances Furter of Cambridge... Hostess of the party was Susette Watson, Frances' classmate at Bryn Mawr... and other guests included Mr. and Mrs. Clinton Towl, Victor Austin and Taber Hamilton...

Wedding Reception at Milton Club

THE MILTON CLUB was crowded Saturday afternoon with wedding guests who had gathered for the reception following Leslie Bremer's marriage to Freddie Mosley, Jr... Eddie Fay escorted Catherine Pontreast... and Peggy Nye Wild was escorted by her bridegroom of a couple of months... Rainette Plimpton created a stir when her Garden of Allah effect... its southern red will veil against her shoulders and around her throat... Ellis Van Kleef wore a printed silk... and several girl friends of Leslie's, who would have been bridesmaids if the First Parish Church in Milton was big enough to accommodate a larger bride party, served ice cream and refreshments at the reception... Leslie and Freddie drove home to her parents' home to change from their wedding frock into their going-away gown... and late of their intimate friends followed them there for farewells.

Junior Philomatheia Plans Skiing Party

WITH ST. VALENTINE'S DAY to be celebrated, penny sales to be planned and final arrangements for next week-end snow train to be discussed, the Junior Philomatheias put in a busy week-end.

St. Valentine and snow sports were topics of conversation at the meeting and tea yesterday at the chalet. Paul Geden boosted snow skis and snow-shoeing and skiing while the hospitality committee, headed by Gertrude Abner and her helpers, flattered about the tea tables which were effectively decorated with red hearts and cupid bows.

On Saturday, Florence Garrity, who heads the group of members of the club from Brookline, was hostess at a buffet supper to interest all the Brookline members in the sale which is slated for the first of March at the college auditorium.

Royal Blue

Florence received her guests, looking very attractive in royal blue trimmed with silver lace, and gave a delightful dinner. The ways and means of raising money for the benefit event were discussed by a group of workers which included Betty Park, who was smart in a two piece suit of rust wool, Annette Healey, her brown skirt topped with a pink wool sweater, and Dorothy Dillon, whose engagement to Francis Conway was recently announced, chose a frock of brown and white print.

Janet Hailer, who's actively engaged in collecting prizes for the affair, chose an ensemble of soft blue sheer, daintily tucked and Anis Burns, who is taking an active part in "The Cradle Song" which is slated for March 12 at Boston College auditorium, was frocked in blue tulle striped with silver threads.

Kathleen Macgregor chose the most ballroom frock of the evening... a Delmonico one of black crepe, festively bordered with var-colored embroidery, and the neckline of Catherine Towle's blue crepe was outlined with rhinestone trim.

Ploid Frock

Peggy Anderson chose a bright green, ploid frock, and Virginia Cronin was gowned in lipstick red crepe, its shoulders outlined with silk. Other guests attending the get-together were Eleanor Callahan, Rita Carr, Doris Valler, Gertrude Randall, Eleanor Heaton, Constance Monahan, Ellen Mahoney, Peggy Leonard, Betty Kellner, Katherine Hodgkins, Elizabeth Gould and Frances Ford.

Palmyra Athine of Dorchester who is chairman of the event slated for the first evening in March, at the chalet, is interested in the undertaking which benefits the scholarship fund. With her heavily-trimmed suit of brown wool, she wore Kelly green accessories.

Aids at Tea

DOROTHY WOODBURY of Brookline who assisted at the tea which followed the Ace of Clubs lecture on "Ireland," this afternoon at the Hotel Somerset.

and Catherine Curley, who is also lending support to the undertaking, chose black crepe. Frances Battaglia, a member of the club's executive board, was gowned in black crepe, a silver mesh collar adding a delicate touch to her costume.

A gay birthday party in the Ballroom Room of the Hotel Somerset Saturday night honored Mr. and Mrs. William P. Elwood of Toledo, Ohio. Kitty Cursey and her sister, Mrs. Francis Doolin, were hostesses of the evening. Kitty chose a gown of lipstick red crepe and Mrs. Doolin wore an effective frock of peach crepe washed in blue.

ANN MARSTERS IN THE MOVIES

Ann Before Camera! -- That First Day! -- An Old Fashioned Girl!

THEN THE MURMURING—See her, film fans? The girl in the shawl and old-fashioned gingham, just to the left of the old-time light post at the end of the medicine man's platform, is the girl Boston and New England know as Ann Marsters, the reporter; but as Hollywood knows, in this scene, as Ann Marsters, screen actress. The scene is that of the murmuring crowd at Titusville, Pa., in 1832, in the Paramount production, "High, Wide and Handsome" starring Irene Dunne. Miss Marsters tells about this, her first appearance before the movie camera in an actual production, in today's article and her revealing series, "ANN MARSTERS IN THE MOVIES."

FOCUS ON THE STAR

NOW, DO IT THIS WAY — The famous director, Robert Mamoulian, who is producing "High, Wide and Handsome" for Paramount, finds time amid his many and perplexing tasks with stars, near-stars and just plain film extras, to take time out on the studio stage to give Ann Marsters personal direction during her first appearance before the camera during the filming of the scene. Mr. Mamoulian pictured here at the left, must be giving pleasant directions for he seems to draw a bit of a smile from Ann, the "old-fashioned girl," who says she wanted to look pleased, instead of shocked, during the scene, anyhow.

FOCUS ON THE STAR

Ann Inveigles Make-Up Artist to Prepare Extra Girl for First Film

Once inside the high, iron gates, I am completely lost. I have to ask so many questions: "Where is the wardrobe department?" "Where do I get made up?" "Where is Stage 2?"

All the stage look alike from the outside. They are concrete buildings, with plain, cement walls and heavy doors. They look like warehouses, like factories with no windows.

Touch of Color

Near the wardrobe building there is a mob of disheveled extras sort of milling around and talking in a language quite different from my own. They are probably listed in the casting department as "South Sea Island Natives." They are going to be in the movie, too.

The girl behind the window takes my name and discovers I am to have an old-fashioned costume for "High, Wide and Handsome." Behind her, there are rows and rows of gowns and costumes of all periods and sizes. But it seems there is nothing that will quite do for me.

"I'll give you a requisition and you'll have to go to Western Costume," she says. "Where's that?" I ask. "You must be new in this business," she says.

"Yes, it's my first day," I say. "The Western Costume Company turns out to be across the street and around the corner from the studio. Here there is everything imaginable and a lot that isn't.

"Are you supposed to be poor?" asks the girl.

"Yes—but I want a pretty costume. I don't think it has to be TOO raggedly."

She gives me a blue one with a white collar and a white waist. I am awed into it. Then I see a blue dress, more like the one I saw in the window, and a small, expensive hat.

Patience, Ann

Oh, well! I never get my make-up, so I'll have to go to the set, will I never be before the camera? But this I remember, as all a part of being in the movie, as I run back to the wardrobe building and get my discarded clothes in a bag.

"Update, to the makeup department, I want a hairdo like the one in the window. I want a hairdo like the one in the window. I want a hairdo like the one in the window."

What an I supposed to do now? I ask myself.

It seems that only the stars and the fairly important players have their makeup put on for them. My extras are supposed to put it on as they stand in the window.

My first day. "Hurry up, dearie, and put your makeup on," says someone. "You're all due on the set in 15 minutes."

"But I don't know how to put on movie makeup," she laughs. "You must be new in this business."

"Yes," I repeat. "It's my first day . . . And I've got to have curls. Where do I find curls?"

I finally get some lovely long curls to match my hair, and they look quite fetching beneath my bonnet. Then, for a while, I break down and come to be an extra girl. I mean myself just long enough to inveigle an expert into making me up.

The last movie makeup takes about 45 minutes to complete—and I get the best. I get just about all the colors in the hair—orange and red and purple and brown and black. (I look simply marvelous.)

Now I am ready to become an actress! Now I am on the set of my picture. The others are there, too—and I do hope I haven't been holding up production.

Irene Dunne and Randolph Scott and Charles Bracford and Elizabeth Patterson and Director Robert Mamoulian are there. So are the assistant directors, the camera men, the soundmen, the electricians, the carpenters, and all the other technicians that it takes to make a movie set function. About 45 extras are scattered around the set, and I notice right away that mine is by far the prettiest dress.

Back to 1852

The set itself is amazing. It transports you into an entirely different world that has nothing to do with Hollywood by the coastward beach.

Here is a white town within three walls—the town of Titusville, Pennsylvania, in the year 1852. Surrounding the town square are stores and taverns and houses and a school. There are slaves and wagons tied to hitching posts. And in the center of the square is a brightly painted platform for the medicine show that comes to town twice a week. The town square will gather to watch the show.

And while we are waiting, Randolph Scott (the hero) tells me about the history of the set. He is designed to be one of the really big pictures of the year—most of a scene between "Cameras" and "Showboats." And, as you remember, Irene Dunne was the star of them both.

Discovered

I am quite disappointed that Irene Dunne recognizes me in those curls and this face. The last time I saw her, I was looking quite normal and ordinary and I haven't even started to be a movie actress.

But now she smiles and says, "Oh, so you are working today."

"Yes," I begin—but I am interrupted. A wardrobe girl approaches me and says:

"Mr. Mamoulian wants you to go and change your costume. He says you look like a hawker's daughter—and there's no hawker in this town."

Well, Mamoulian, too, had noticed how pretty my dress was—but I hadn't thought it was so pretty as all that. I am beginning to discover that my extra girl had a hard life.

So, tripping off over my rattled petticoat, I make my way to Western Costume. I must pass through the studio and out onto the street where my extra girl had a hard life.

And Gingham, Too

Back to the set again in a modest brown gingham and a plain shawl. (Anyways, the dress fits me better than the other one did.)

Mamoulian comes out to be to the Gingham dress. You know, as you remember, Irene Dunne was the star of them both.

"That is very nice," he says. "And what a very nice dress it has. Did you ever see such a fine dress? Maybe you'll be a movie star yet."

"Oh, I'll be a waste if I'm not," I say, sort of under my breath. "I'll be a waste if I'm not," I say, sort of under my breath. "I'll be a waste if I'm not," I say, sort of under my breath.

Film Work Hard, Ann Finds

In the movie, the assistant director yells, "Place, please."

The extras seem to fly together, like a flock of birds. In two seconds they are in the center of the square, clustered before the little platform. I, being "new in this business" just wait to be told what to do.

"Come here," calls the assistant director, not unkindly. And I am placed, quite exactly, in the front row—which makes me very unpopular with the extras in the back row.

Mamoulian ascends the platform. "Now this is a medicine show," he explains. "It isn't very often that such excitement comes to your town, so you are all very curious about it. This is the opening scene in the picture. Miss Dunne is going to sing and dance on the platform to lure you into having the cure-all medicine which her father is selling. When Miss Dunne finishes her song, you applaud and murmur to one another."

A Day's Job

That sounds simple enough—but it isn't. Oh no, indeed, it isn't. As you shall see, it's going to take all day long to complete that sequence to Director Mamoulian's satisfaction.

Now Irene Dunne is on the platform in a black and white ballet dress and long, black silk stockings. She has blonde ringlets on her forehead and a few blonde curls over one shoulder. Her prettiest hair dance while the camera is being focused and the lights tested on all that. There seems to be hundreds of tiny lights overhead and dozens of smaller ones nearby. I can feel the heat from them penetrating my makeup.

Miss Dunne's stand-in, dressed in the same kind of costume, has been put for half an hour while those lights were properly adjusted upon her face. Now everything, surely, is ready for a take.

Terrible!

"Quiet, please, everybody!" Irene begins to sing. It is a gay, lilting, catchy song—the theme song of the picture. It begins:

Lunch Call Gives a Rest

And then, "Action."

So the young ladies and the dance begins and we look shocked and pained and pleased. I keep on looking puzzled, because I think she is very pretty, and I say "when it's time to say it, 'Act, the pretty!'"

Yes—this is being in the movies. I am outside of Titusville, Pennsylvania, now. I am looking for the studio safe.

I see one of Paramount's special officers in a uniform, and I ask:

"Which way is the studio safe?"

He grins. "You must be new."

"Yes," I interrupt. "It's my first day."

And so to lunch—the first half of that first day over. Ann Marsters has been in the movies. But she's just started. The third article in this revealing series, "ANN MARSTERS IN THE MOVIES," will be published in TOMORROW'S BOSTON EVENING AMERICAN. In it, Boston's noted girl reporter, who temporarily turned Glamour Girl and screen actress, will tell you about "being in movies" from actual experience, will vividly and gaily recount further experiences on the set of Paramount's "High, Wide and Handsome." The stories of her experiences in this and other productions will follow daily thereafter.

Randolph Scott, who plays the male lead for Irene Dunne, in her Paramount starring production, "High, Wide and Handsome," is pictured here in a scene with Miss Dunne in the film—one of the scenes Ann Marsters witnessed as she worked as an extra girl on the set with the stars and which she's telling about in her new series, "ANN MARSTERS IN THE MOVIES."

"High, wide and handsome, I'm riding into the land. Run, little honey run, would you were a bird, and so you could fly . . ."

We, the topsy-turvy, look on and smile and applaud and murmur to one another. But it seems we are terrible.

Mamoulian catches us.

"And you all have the same expression on your faces, and most you stand there like sticks!" You don't all have to be so pleased by the song and dance. Some of the women should look shocked and keep their eyes on their husbands. Some of the girls may be jealous and turn up their noses. And when you murmur, don't murmure. Say something. Turn to your neighbor and say, "Isn't she lovely?" or "Isn't she pretty?" or "Such a sight!" And say it a little louder.

"Well, take the picture this time—so remember."

We wait around for several minutes while Irene Dunne's makeup is repaired and her curls rearranged. And Raymond Walters, who plays Irene's father, takes his place on the platform beside her.

Murmurings!

"Hold it! Quiet, please!" calls the assistant director—and there is not a breath to be heard. "Camera," says Mamoulian.

Writes:

Hello Everybody, This Is Fred Hoey Speaking:
It has become increasingly evident in the last few years that fans are taking their baseball more seriously than ever. Not only do they keep pace with the news furnished daily by their favorite basenel expert, but they have gone a step farther and equipped themselves with all the record books, so religiously followed by writers and base commentators.

We have received many requests from fans for a list of books we depend on for record guidance. Our list is similar to a baseball fan's.

The first is the Baseball Yearbook, which the Baseball Yearbook is a must for every fan. It is a book which is published annually and contains a great deal of information about the game.

DEVELOP OWN STARS

By BILL GRIMES
Realizing that owners of major and minor league clubs are becoming more and more difficult to deal with when he's on the market for players, Bob Quinn, president of the Bees, is determined to establish a string of "farms" which will enable him to develop his youngsters along easy stages until they have fallen by the wayside or are ready for the big league.

The Bees have paid $100,000 for the rights to the "farms" which will be used to develop the club's young players. The Junior Birdmen Of America

Under the leadership of adult aviation enthusiasts, model plane construction, model contests and other Junior Birdmen activities are getting a spurt in two widely separate centers, Hopedale and Fitchburg, as a result of reports received at wing headquarters.

The Junior Birdmen of America is the name of the squadron being formed in Hopedale (left) and David Grant, both of which are in the same town. The Junior Birdmen of America is a group of young men who are interested in aviation. They are working on model planes and other aviation-related projects. The group is led by adult aviation enthusiasts who provide guidance and support.

WORRY MONEY
Experts

By HUGH E. BRADSHAW

In the opinion of many State St. observers there is only one item of financial news today. And that is concerned with the outcome of Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau's conference on the importation of foreign capital.

There can be no doubt but that the highest officials connected with fiscal affairs and the markets are greatly worried over the continued flow of foreign funds into the United States.

The position of foreign capital importation will be discussed by Secretary Morgenthau together with Charles Loomis, the assistant director of the Federal Reserve, and a representative of the entire foreign exchange market. It is believed that the efforts of the Treasury will be to bring about a more liberal policy toward the importation of foreign capital.

While the action does not seem to be a serious one, it is believed that the Treasury will be to bring about a more liberal policy toward the importation of foreign capital.
